

Back to Basics

Thick coats of paint once covered these 1940s wall-hung cabinets, which were sandblasted to expose the bare metal, then varnished to protect their gleaming beauty. Beaded board, applied like a skin to the base cabinets, was painted graphite gray to harmonize with the steel.

